ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Moore-Pioneer Genealogical Society was formed in March 1980 by Tressie Nealy, Louana Bowker, Myra Manley and Katherine Matthews. After one year it was evident that interest in belonging to the group was county-wide. In May 1981 the young society was reorganized as the Cleveland County Genealogical Society.

The objects and purposes of the society are to promote the education and knowledge of the membership and the public in family history, genealogical records and research; to acquire genealogical information to be shared among members; to promote the recording and preservation of records of genealogical and historical value.

Preservation of local records and their availability to all researchers is a particular concern of the society.

Many thanks to the members of the Cleveland County Genealogical Society including Sharron Ashton, Gerald J. Carter, Naomi Claxton, Geneva Coates, Geri Crow (deceased), Beckie Jeffries, Genivia Jury, Dorothy MacNiven, Katharine Mathews, Virginia McCann and Tressie Nealy who so patiently abstracted and verified the numerous entries.

Special words of appreciation to Norma Nichols, Cleveland County Court Clerk, and her staff. Their support and cooperation made this project possible.

Janet E. Tate, Chairman
Special Projects

INTRODUCTION

President Benjamin Harrison, on 23 March 1889, issued a proclamation for opening the unassigned lands to white settlers making way for the formation of Oklahoma Territory. Earlier that year the United States had acquired title to the Unassigned District from the Creek and Seminole Indian Tribes. Approximately two-thirds of present day Cleveland County was opened to settlement in the first land opening, a land run, on 22 April 1889.

The same bill which authorized the opening of these lands also established a townsite which later became the county seat at Norman. It wasn't until 24 May 1890 that Oklahoma Territory's first governor, George W. Steel, an appointee of President Harrison, determined the boundaries of six counties within the "unassigned lands" and gave them numerical designations. Cleveland County was first known as the "third" county. Its boundaries were the Indian Treaty line of 1866 on the east, the South Canadian River on the south, the "fourth" county (Canadian) on the west and what is now Southwest 59th Street of Oklahoma City on the north.

By July 1890 the "third" county had a functioning county government at Norman, which took its name from the railroad station ground that was established two years before the opening of the unassigned lands. The name Cleveland County was adopted 5 August 1890 by a vote of the people.

The third land opening in Oklahoma Territory was a "land run" for the Sac and Fox, Iowa, Pottawatomie and Shawnee Indian lands. This run on 22 September 1891 changed the boundaries of Cleveland County to its present size and shape. The changes are of particular interest to those who might have had ancestors living in that two mile strip on the northern boundary since they would have been residents of Cleveland County prior to that date. Indian Land Allotment records for the eastern third of the county will also be found in the Cleveland County records.

The First Territorial Legislature, by an act of December 1890, established the University of Oklahoma at Norman. The first state mental institution was located in Cleveland County. It is interesting to note, there not being any other place to care for them, many Civil War Veterans were placed in Central State Hospital (the mental institution). Many who died there were interred in the I.O.O.F. Cemetery in Norman.

Cleveland County's population in 1890 was 7,011. Microfilm copies of population schedules for the 1890 and 1900 Census of Oklahoma Territory and the 1910 Oklahoma Census are available at the Oklahoma Historical Society Library, Wiley Post Building, Oklahoma City.

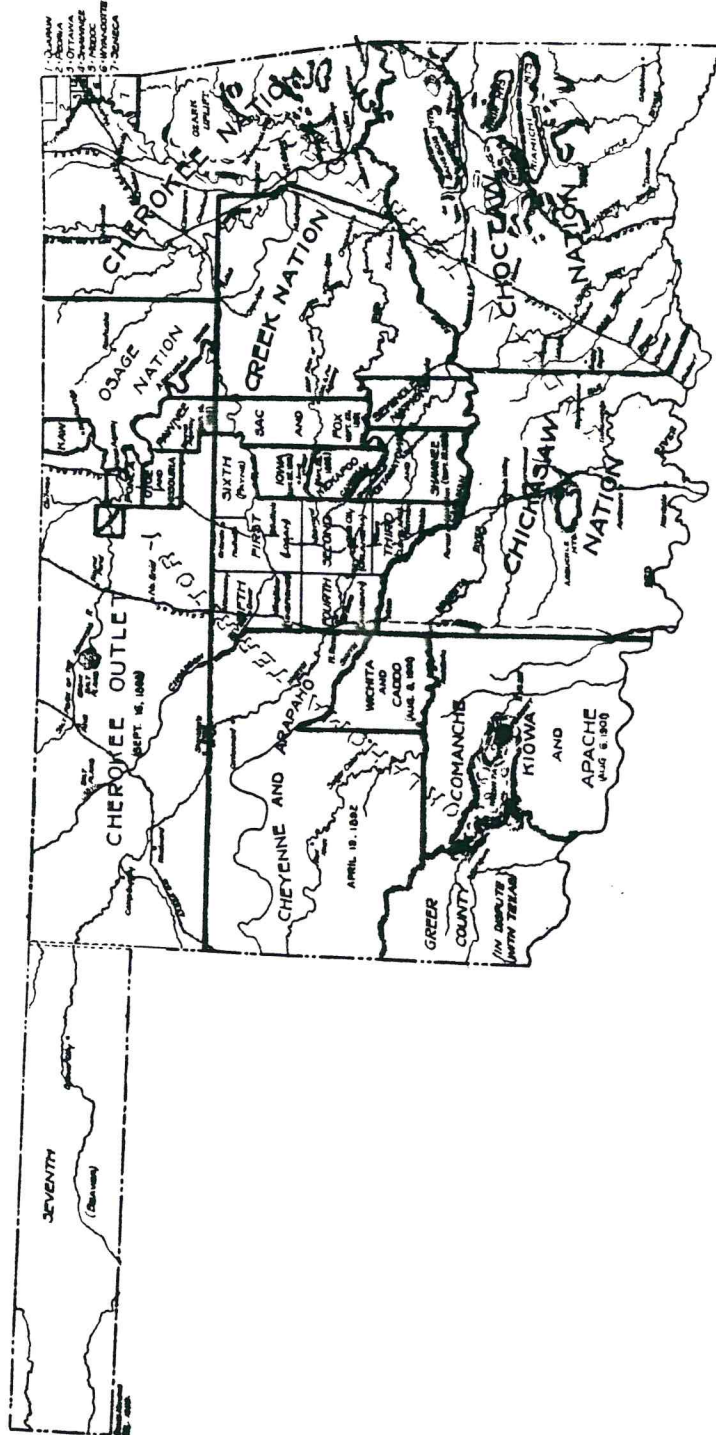

Before 1889, with the exception of the panhandle in the northwest and "old" Greer County in the southwest corner, all of the area that comprises the present state of Oklahoma was Indian Territory. Although the Indians in the eastern half of the Indian Territory had functioning tribal governments, including county or district courts, few records of marriage are extant. The exception would be marriages between Indians and non-Indians.

Until the 1890s there was not a county or district court in which to file marriages between non-Indians residing in the Indian Territory. This does not mean marriages between non-Indians did not take place in the territory. Many couples were married in counties which bordered the Indian Territory in Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri, Texas and after 1889 the Oklahoma Territory. Other couples were married in the Indian Territory by ministers and other officials who resided here. Although the records of these unions may not be of record in any court, the couple may have been given a certificate of marriage, or the marriage may have been recorded in a church or minister's register.

This publication, the second in a series, contains marriage records transcribed from the original Cleveland County Oklahoma Territory Marriage Book One 1890-1895. Although the early penmanship was often difficult to decipher we have attempted to publish as accurate and complete a record as possible. The original spelling and punctuation has been retained. All information from the original book is found in this volume.

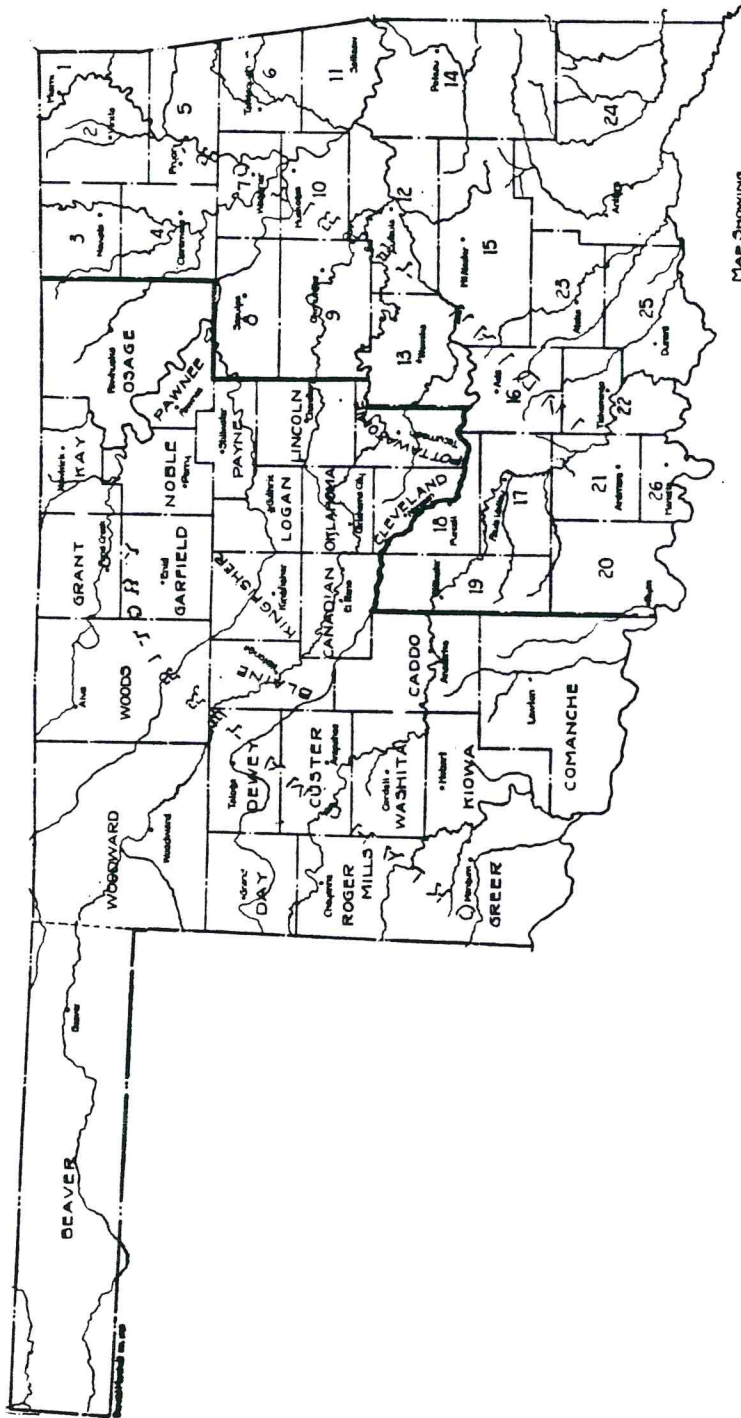

The value of this publication to genealogists with Cleveland County ancestors is apparent. Researchers working on families who resided in the Indian Territory, where records on non-Indians are scarce, will find it equally valuable. Cleveland County, bordered on the south by the Chickasaw Nation, appears to have been a favorite place for Indian Territory couples to be married. Over twenty percent of the marriages in this volume have an Indian Territory connection. The marriage records are not limited to couples from Cleveland County and Indian Territory. Other Oklahoma Territory counties are represented, and many individuals were listed as being residents of other states.

The first column lists the name of the groom, his age, race, birthplace, residence, name of father and mother when given. The second column lists the same information on the bride. The third column lists date of marriage, marriage book and page number, place of the marriage, name of marriage official and witnesses. Some entries will have six lines. Asterisks are used to indicate additional information on the sixth line. Quotation marks are used to indicate verbatim remarks. Editors' notes are enclosed in brackets.
