SHILOH CEMETARY
1890-1989

IN CHURCH YARD OF METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH
CALLED SHILOH 1889-1972

In 1889 services were first organized by Mr. E.V. Johnson. Ground for the first of three churches which occupied the site was donated by his brother-in-law, Mr. Robert W. Yeargin. Rev. L.L. Henry, first in a series of circuit-riding ministers, was appointed in October 7, 1889.

In 1890 a little maples boy died and additional acreage was acquired from Mr. Yeargin for the cemetery. Church yard and cemetery comprised two acres of land located one-half mile north of Slaughterville Road on 72nd Road, Sec. 8-T 7 N- R 1 W, Cleveland County, Oklahoma.

At one time an attempt was made by Mr. Henry Gibbs to locate and mark all of the graves. However, many of the marking stones were removed by someone who was temporarily responsible for mowing the grass. The following record update was conducted by Inez Burnan King and Mary Ann King, members of the last congregation to attend Shiloh Methodist Church.

↑ Large stone was church step in front of concrete steps which were removed when the building was razed in 1975. This is all that remains of the church site.

PAPER CONSERVATION

The value of paper conservation cannot be overemphasized.

If you are one of the lucky genealogists who have in your possession old letters, diaries or manuscripts from your ancestors, you need to take steps now in order to preserve them for the future.

"Collection of objects is pointless if they are not to be preserved," says the Minnesota Historical Society.

Paper is made to "self-destruct." This deterioration of paper is caused by many factors, perhaps the most significant of which are the kinds of materials and chemicals which are used in the paper making process.

A Brief History of Paper

Paper gets its name from papyrus, a reed which the ancient Egyptians used for making writing material. The Egyptians cut the papyrus stalks into thin slices and pressed them into sheets.

Very early paper was almost all fiber like cotton, linen, and rags. The rags were wetted, rolled into balls, and set in moist piles to ferment for 4-6 weeks. Later, these rags were beaten into a pulp for making paper.

The demand for paper was very light until the eighteenth century. As the need for paper increased, ground wood was used for making paper pulp by the Germans in 1840. Paper produced at this time had a higher fiber content than the paper made today. This older paper is probably much more stable than paper made during this century.

The current process for making paper uses wood that has been ground up and processed, then pressed into paper. This modern paper contains a high lignin and acid content. These chemicals tend to break down under prolonged exposure to light and oxygen to form damaging self-destroying acid over a period of time.

Although these factors are primarily responsible for discoloration and embrittlement of papers, additional damage can be caused by dust, dirt, mold, insects, and rodents.

The Environment

Here are several environmental factors to consider in the storage of paper documents.

1. Temperature. The room needs to be maintained somewhere between 60-70 degrees Fahrenheit. A constant temperature is preferable to one that fluctuates.

2. Humidity. The humidity needs to be between 45-60%. Therefore, except in special situations, this excludes the storage of paper in the attic or basement. In order to maintain a stable atmosphere, air conditioning is suggested. This not only controls the temperature but also the humidity.

3. Light. It is best to keep light, both natural and artificial, at a minimum. If you are displaying an object, it needs to be placed where it is never in direct sunlight. This light can cause it to fade and can increase the rate of breakdown in the structure of the paper.

4. Clean storage area. Keep free of dust, dirt, mold, insects, and rodents.

How To Care For Your Paper Heirlooms

When you first find old family documents, you need to stop and think before you pick them up and handle them. Ask yourself the question, "What do you want to do with these documents?"

"Plan on where you are going to put them. Then, use clean white cotton gloves to handle them or use very clean hands. Remember that you have oils in your skin and that these can cause problems with your paper," suggests Kathleen M. Wallis, Director of the Cleveland County Historical Museum.

If you have a series of letters and they are folded and in envelopes, keep the envelopes. Keep the stamps on the envelopes because they are more collectable and a better document if they are left on the envelope. Unfold the letter and keep it with the envelope, especially if it is pre-statehood.

"I would recommend using file folders. If you can afford to buy archival folders, I would use those since they have reduced acid," Kathleen says. "If you do not purchase archival folders, I would suggest frequently changing the file folders and not keeping them forever. They, too, will break down since they are made of acid paper. All folders and storage boxes should be 'acid free' and have a pH of 8.5 and a 3% calcium carbonate buffer added. Additionally, all materials should be free of ground wood and lignin if possible."

There is no logical source to buy acid-free folders and boxes. These have to be ordered through the mail at a slightly higher cost. In the long run, when you are preserving very valuable old documents which are not replaceable, they are well worth the cost. Be sure to label the folder, just opening lets in the light and dirt.

If you are looking at plastics, the most inert one is Mylar. It's a polyester product so beware that it will generate static electricity. This could be damaging as it could lift the film off the surface of a photograph.

Polyethylene is very soft and comes in sleeves for papers and post cards, etc. It doesn't offer as much support as Mylar. Be careful of the plastic notebook pages you can buy at the store, the black center sheet may not be acid-free.

Thing to Avoid

Do not use staples, paper clips, rubber bands or scotch tape. Metal clips and staples will rust with the humidity in the air, even if they don't get wet. Scotch tape will leave a stain on the paper which is permanent. Rubber bands will disintegrate and leave a mark. You can buy plastic paper clips, not plastic-coated wire clips, if you must attach items together for storage.

Do not laminate. This is a non-reversible process. Adhesive in the laminate over a period of time forms a chemical reaction and eventually you will get a transparent or translucent stain on the paper. There is nothing you can do to stop it or remove it. Do not laminate items you intend to keep.

Do not roll papers or documents, even larger ones, if you can avoid it. Paper is very pliable when it is new but, as it ages, it becomes more brittle. If it is rolled, often times you cannot unroll it without damaging it and breaking the surface of the paper. This is especially true of photographs.

By applying a few simple environmental conservation storage techniques, we can all extend the quality and life span of paper, books, and other artifacts placed in our care. In our next newsletter, we will discuss conservation of photos, larger pieces, and multiple items.

LIBRARY CONTRIBUTION

Our appreciation goes to Celia Morris Phillips who has contributed to our library collection a copy of When Corbett Flourished: The Early Years by Harreld K. Howell and Hilda Patti Howell. This book is given in memory of Ms. Phillips mother, Clemmontyne Carrie Corbett Morris.
