President's Message

BY JEAN MCCRACKEN

It's Time to Pay Your Dues

The Cleveland County Genealogical Society 2018 dues expire December 31. The 2019 dues may be paid any time during December and are due January 1, 2019. A 2019 membership form is included with this newsletter. We depend on membership dues, as well as donations from members and friends, to fund the operation of the CCGS library. We are looking forward to being relieved of this responsibility at the opening of the new Norman Central Library next fall. From all indications it will be a very impressive library. The local and family history section will provide space for most of our books and records. Even more important, researchers will be able to access these materials seven days a week, whenever the Public Library is open, compared to the current access for eight hours weekly only on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

Word from the Transition Committee

The CCGS Transition Committee has been meeting occasionally with the Cleveland County Historical Society to discuss the possible merger of our two organizations after we no longer have the CCGS Library. We need to determine what the needs of CCGS will be in the future.

Working toward that goal, the committee set meetings on October 24 and November 2, 2018 and invited our society members to join us. The October meeting was attended by only the four Transition committee members. Two society members attended the November meeting, in addition to six committee and board members.

The committee had hoped to have more involvement by society members in order for us to consider the positive and negative aspects of a future merger. Time is growing short for decisions to be made concerning the future of The Cleveland County Genealogical Society, Inc. Your opinions and questions are still welcome.

Please remember that CCGS Board meetings are open to all of our members. If you have something to contribute, please plan to attend the next board meeting at 1:30 p.m. Monday, December 10, 2018, in the CCGS library.

Join us for Holiday Cheer Tuesday, December 18

The CCGS library volunteers invite members and friends of genealogy to join us at the Genealogy Library between 1 and 5 p.m. on Tuesday, December 18, for holiday cookies and a cup of warm apple cider. The Library will close on that date at 5:00 p.m. for the holiday season and will reopen at 1 p.m. Tuesday, January 8, 2019.

The Winning of World War II in the Pacific:

BY MARY LEWIS

This story has two parts: first, the Navy Seabees, the military group responsible for much of the building of infrastructure in wartime. It also features one Cleveland county citizen (my father-in-law) who was called up to help fight that war as a Seabee in the U.S. Navy.

The Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941 caught America by surprise. At that time, the United States had about 70,000 civilians, hired by construction companies, building infrastructure for military installations overseas. International law made it illegal for these workers to resist enemy attack. This classifies them as guerrillas, which could result in their instant execution. Naval Construction Battalions, controlled by the military, were conceived as a replacement for this civilian labor force, which was desperately needed as the United States rushed to create the infrastructure required to fight and win a war.

During 1941 and 1942, early versions of Construction Battalions were organized, beginning with recruitment of civil engineers, including draftsmen, engineers and others to oversee the actual construction work that would follow. Officers of the Civil Engineering Corps would exercise military authority over all officers and enlisted men assigned to construction units. The first men in the Seabees were not raw recruits; they were recruited for their trade experience and skills. In order to find men with the necessary qualifications, physical standards were less rigid than other branches of the armed forces. The age range was 18-50, with the average of 37. Even so, all men were put through the same physical training. Recruits would receive three weeks of training at one of several camps in Virginia. The first battalions were sent directly overseas because immediate infrastructure was so desperately needed. Later trainees were sent to Naval Training Centers for additional training before being moved to the front lines.

The 135th U.S. Naval Construction Battalion

In August of 1943, the U.S. Navy began the process of organizing the 135th Naval Construction Battalion, the subject of this story. The Battalion was initially formed at Camp Peary, Williamsburg Virginia, with the Officer in Charge, Commander Paul C. Gillette, a civil engineer. This Battalion had a short two-year life, but served as one crucial cog in the winning of the war.

The Cleveland County Seabee

World War II confronted an Oklahoma family in September of 1943. William Ray Lewis, of Lindsay, Garvin County, Oklahoma, received Greetings from his Uncle Sam, ordering him to appear before Dr. John Calloway for a physical examination at 7:00 p.m. on September 3, 1943, in the doctor's office at Pauls Valley, Oklahoma. This may have come as a surprise. On the other hand, Ray Lewis may have been planning his strategy should he be called up. Ray's brother-in-law, Clyde Sherrill was a builder in Pauls Valley. I think I recall that Clyde joined the SeaBees and influenced Ray Lewis's path when his number was called up.

In September 1943, 1,100 men began a 4-week Seabee boot camp at Camp Peary in Williamsburg, Virginia. On October 20, 1943, these men graduated to become the 135th Naval Construction Battalion. They would be moved to a new station, Camp Endicott, Rhode Island.

When Uncle Sam wants you, he wants you right now! The record states that Ray Lewis entered active service on October 13, 1943. His personal notes indicate that he made a cross-country trip, probably to connect with the 135th Construction Battalion at their new station at Camp Endicott, on the shore of Narragansett Bay in Rhode Island.

At Camp Endicott, the 135th graduate boots were to take advanced training which emphasized combat techniques. In one month, this Seabee battalion was trained in a variety of skills to operate efficiently under any of the many unpredictable conditions they might encounter. On December 7, 1943, the battalion was given a formal review on the parade ground at Endicott. Here the battalion was presented its colors and was commissioned.

Lewis left behind his wife of fourteen years and a son, age 13. Ray had worked with his father in retail operations in rural Oklahoma until his father lost the store during the depression. Ray's employment during the depression years had been planning and managing sales for retail stores in western rural Oklahoma, moving his family from town to town, just trying to make a buck and keep a roof over their heads in the depths of the depression. In 1939, he began managing retail dry goods for P.M. Cate in Lindsay, Oklahoma.

On December 18, 1943, the 135th left Camp Endicott, transported in three separate sections, traveling three different routes. Four days later, after a 2,000 mile Pullman ride, they arrived at Gulfport, Mississippi. The battalion spent four months at Camp Hollyday, at Gulfport. Here the Westerners in the unit were given embarkation leave. (Easterners had been given this leave prior to the unit's leaving Endicott.

By this time, the Lewis family had moved to Norman, next door to his parents' home at 402 College Avenue. Clara Lewis found work at Tinker Field in Oklahoma City, working with a close-knit group of women building airplanes for the war effort. I don't know whether she worked night shifts. I do know that my future husband, their son, Bill, was surrounded by caring adults as he entered Norman High School.

At Gulfport, the emphasis was on actual operations, practicing the skills they had been learning. They worked on actual construction jobs on Horn Island (a secret army experimental base.) They dismantled a barge at West Pier. They laid out a simulated mine field for Army War Dog training. They constructed camp structures, and others practiced their trade or duties. The unit also received additional military training. They practiced an amphibious landing on Cat Island, and its occupation. They also practiced other intensive exercises designed to test their ability to function under any circumstances. After four months, the 135th was not perfect but took on a more assured and polished appearance and was functioning reliably and efficiently. On April 20, 1944, the 135th shipped out of Gulfport, headed for the Pacific shore.

At age 35, William Ray Lewis was one of the "old men" of the unit. Scanning company photographs in the unit's publication, many of the men appear to be little more than kids barely out of high school. I don't recall my father-in-law talking much about his function with the SeaBees, but the few notes he left indicate that he may have followed his trade as a store-keeper.

On the west coast, the 135th engaged in more training, including 3 weeks devoted to an equipping and military program. On May 17, 1944, the 135th boarded ship, the SS Meteor and headed across the Pacific.

The 135th Battalion arrived at Pearl Harbor May 23, 1944. They disembarked and were taken to an incomplete area on Moana [Iua] Ridge, where the men quickly completed barracks in the area. They then helped to build facilities and handled other assignments vital to this giant base which served as the springboard of the U.S. Pacific offense. They also received additional training, which included hard marches and sham battles.

The 135th Battalion was ordered to an [undetermined] forward area on September 29, 1944. The first echelon left on the U.S.S. Adair. Ten days later the second echelon went aboard the Dutch liner Tjisadane. After layovers in the Marshalls, both ships headed west for Island "X."

The first echelon of the 135th Seabees landed on Tinian on the early morning of October 24, 1944, only three months after the Second and Fourth Marine divisions began the assault of this Japanese-held island and only eight weeks since the American flag was raised over the island.

The 135th Naval Construction Battalion was ready to go to work and make their contribution to history.

Tinian

Tinian is one of the Marianas Islands. It is 10 ½ miles long, with a maximum width of five miles. It contains 48 square miles.

On July 14, 1944, the Second and Fourth U.S. Marine Divisions began the assault and invasion of Tinian. The Stars and Stripes were raised over Tinian about ten days later, on August 2, 1944. Within twelve weeks, the 135th Seabees landed on Tinian. During the first few days they laid out the permanent campsite, organized their supplies and equipment, and generally brought order to their operation. During the first week, K-rations and hot coffee were all the food available. During the second week the second echelon landed. C-rations became the men's regular diet for the next few months.

Almost at once, most of the men were assigned to airstrip construction. The Battalion shops were constructed, organized and put into operation. The men found they were in a war zone; they had to deal with air raids and sometimes had to deal with local Japanese.

Once their own working facilities were constructed, the men of the 135th C.B. began their primary assignment toward the war effort—building runways. Working beside numerous other construction battalions, they participated in the construction of every Navy and Army airfield and facility on Tinian. Early on, despite enemy bombing and strafing, a 6,000 foot runway with complete facilities for Navy search and bombing planes was completed within the deadlines.

On December 20, 1944 the first 8,500 foot B-29 field was commissioned, and the first giant super fortress landed on it the next day. Similar construction continued until, with the 135th Seabees as "lead construction battalion," the final super-bomber strip was completed. This airstrip established Tinian as one of the greatest military airdromes in the world.

Living and working in a war zone, the 135th Seabees knew they were only one tiny cog in a great machine. Even in the early hours of August 6, 1945, as they gathered to watch the Enola Gay take off on the runway they had built, they did not know the significance of their work to the war effort.

Hours later, word came that Hiroshima had been destroyed by a new bomb, an atomic bomb. Days later, the war was over. The work of the 135th had been most important. The men could soon look forward to going home to a world at peace.

Later in life, after his Seabee days, Ray Lewis sold advertising specialties for his father's Sooner Specialty Company. He inherited the company at his father's death and continued selling specialties until his death in 1976. He also raised cattle, and for a few years ran a dairy operation on his farm east of Noble, Oklahoma.

A Miracle of Construction

EDITOR'S NOTE: We quote this page in its entirety, from The 135th U.S. Naval Construction Battalion Review, prepared in 1946 expressly for the officers and enlisted men of the 135th U.S. Naval Construction Battalion and their families.

A news commentator who visited Tinian shortly after the first Superfortress landed on the island told the public that he had witnessed "miracles of construction"—the accomplishments of Navy Seabees in the development of Tinian Island as an operational base for planes of the 20th

Air Force. The 135th Construction Battalion is proud to have helped make these “miracles” possible.

The story of the development of a B-29 airfield on Tinian is an interesting one. The north end of the island, fairly level, was the site of one 4,000 foot Japanese runway with facilities for medium bombers. American forces immediately put this field to use for evacuation and supply planes. The Seabees also made it possible for the Navy to establish there an operating base for Liberator search and bombing squadrons within a month. However, because of the proximity of Tinian to the Japanese homelands, plans were immediately formulated for the construction of a base for B-29 bombers. Japanese propagandists said that it could not be done, but on December 21, 1944, but 36 days after work on the first strip had begun, Navy Seabees had finished an 8,500 foot runway for the first Superfortress to land upon. Seven hundred thousand cubic yards of earth had been moved, nine thousand truck miles had been piled up. But this was only the beginning.

To begin with, with the exception of the inferior Jap strip, the area was covered with fields of sugar cane. Jap farm houses, enemy oil and ammunition dumps, revetments and dugouts. The first task, after the preliminary survey was completed, was the cutting of the cane and the stripping of topsoil from the solid coral formation of the island. This job took every available shovel, bulldozer, pan, carry-all and truck. Then the area had to be leveled off before the sub grade for the airfield could be started. Pans, dozers and rooters were unable to do the work without liberal use of dynamite, and again and again the island shook. High points were excavated—low spots were filled. Hundreds of men and hundreds of pieces of equipment worked around the clock. The north end of the island looked like a huge jig-saw puzzle.

Huge coral pits were developed, with hundreds of trucks running day and night from the source of the material where they were filled by power shovels, to the airfield area where dumpmen regulated the disposal of the loads to prevent the slightest confusion. It was like a well-oiled machine—and with the tempo increasing, one by one, problems were overcome and difficulties remedied. The coral was spread, leveled, impacted, rolled—layer by layer—until the final surface had been reached. It was discovered that the action of the salt water, sprayed from tank trucks on the coral as it was spread and rolled encouraged a cementing process. It was also discovered that the pulverizing of the coral by sheepsfoot rollers increased the cement-like formation and speeded the action. All along the line, innovations were introduced as the men observed the results of their work. By the time the first strip was completed, and a little later, after it had been used and subjected to the tremendous weight of the heavy bombers, further improvements to the delicate process were developed and put to use in subsequent construction.

As soon as each phase of the first huge strip had been completed, similar work was started on another. It was mass production, Deadlines were not only being met, they were being beaten and the quality of the workmanship was improving with experience. Military authorities were so impressed with the original facilities planned for the island when they neared completion that additional ones were quickly authorized and further development continued without interruption. The jig-saw puzzle stage was no more.

Among other things, V-J Day gave evidence that these “miracles of construction” had served their purpose well.

Meetings

October

Lina Ortega, representing the Western History Collection at the University of Oklahoma, discussed the history and holdings of this special collection.

The Western History Collection was established in 1927 when President William B. Bizzell and oil executive Frank Phillips signed an agreement establishing a special collection of historical materials documenting the American West.

Phillips agreed to give the University $2,000 a year for 5 years. After the initial period, the university was to continue developing the collection. History professor Edward Everett Dale became first curator of the Phillips Collection and controlled its acquisition policy from 1927 until he retired in 1952.

In 1948 a Rockefeller Foundation grant financed the start of the Manuscript Division of the University of Oklahoma Library. Gaston Litton was selected as archivist. The mission of the manuscript division was to acquire and make available Oklahoma and Western manuscript collections for researchers at the university.

Both the Phillips Collection and the University Libraries manuscript division operated independently of each other until 1957, when Arrell M. Gibson accepted a joint appointment as professor of history and curator of both collections.

Today, the OU Western History Collection includes photographic archives, digital collections, sound recordings, maps, and the University Archives.

November

Our speaker, Mike Sheriff, is a docent for the Oklahoma Historical Center. Using reenactment, one of the finest forms of storytelling, Sheriff took us back to the 1870s, when cattle drovers moved large herds of cattle across Indian Territory to the railroads in Kansas. There cattle were loaded onto rail cars, destined to feed the American public.

Wearing authentic period equipment, Sheriff talked about the experiences of the cattle drives.

November Board Meeting Canceled

The November meeting of the Board of Directors was cancelled due to winter weather. The next Board meeting will be Monday, December 10, 2018.

2018 Bakeless Bake Sale Report

The invitations to the current year's Bakeless Bake Sale were mailed in July. As of this publication date, we have received $1,845 in donations from our members and friends of genealogy.

Your contributions during the past decade have enabled CCGS to keep the rent paid and the Genealogy Library open until the day our genealogy collection moves into the new Norman Central Library upon its completion.

Society of Sons & Daughters of WWII Veterans

The Sons and Daughters of World War II Veterans is a program of the Admiral Nimitz Foundation and the Nimitz Education and Research Center. This Society was created to preserve the stories of America's "greatest generation," who fought and won WWII and to enable their descendants to establish family ancestry from an American veteran of World War II.

The Society database will also be a significant resource for educators and students, authors and historians.

Society membership is open to relatives by birth, adoption or marriage to anyone who served in the United States military in World War II. A Memorial membership is also available for unrelated friends of a qualifying veteran. Memberships require the veteran's proof of service between December 7, 1941 and December 31, 1946.

Society of Sons & Daughters of World War II Veterans members will receive a numbered and dated certificate bearing your name and the name of your World War II veteran ancestor.

Since You Asked ...

BY MARY LEWIS

Q I'd like to get my Cleveland County ancestors on the Registry of Pioneers of Cleveland County, Oklahoma Territory. But it does not make sense that I must provide six generations of ancestors.

A Nominators only have to provide information about each generation submitted, beginning with the nominator and ending with the Pioneer ancestor.

In the first year of the Pioneers Registry, one member, with deep Pioneer roots in territorial Oklahoma, chose to apply in the names of her grandchildren and great-grandchildren, thus adding three generations of facts about these pioneer Cleveland County families.

This member highlighted the longevity of eight generations in Cleveland County, with the nomination of James Henry Bennett and his wife, Lucy Jane Smith, submitted in the name of their fifth-great-grandson, Brady Michael Williams. This applicant's tactic, recording facts about as many generations as possible, is a smart move.

In another year, a member nominated her grandparents, requiring only three generations, to the Pioneers Registry

The Pioneers Registry is now entering its sixth year, as an initiative to record basic information about Cleveland County's territorial inhabitants and to hold these records in perpetuity, to be available to future family history researchers.

Now is a good time to begin gathering information about your Pioneer ancestors in Cleveland County. Call, e-mail, or write to CCGS, requesting a Pioneers Registry packet, which contains instructions and the application forms. CCGS membership is not required for application to the Registry

Local residents can visit the CCGS Library on a Tuesday or Thursday afternoon, where our volunteers can help you find the proofs you need for your application. Others can begin the application process, then contact the CCGS Library for additional help. Our Archives may contain information to support your application. There will be small charges for copies.

2019 Pioneer Registry applications must be received by CCGS on or before Tuesday, August 20, 2019. Successful Pioneer applications will be honored at the regular meeting of the Cleveland County Genealogical Society in October 2019.

Panther Ravaging Little River Country

News comes that a panther of more than ordinary size is ravaging the country in the neighborhood of the Capshaw school on Little River, killing calves and pigs and creating somewhat of a reign of terror, for the animal may attack children and older people. A "drive" will take place in a few days in the hope that the beast may be found and killed.

Christmas Is Coming

From every part of the country comes news that Christmas is to be celebrated this year with more of the real Christmas spirit than has been manifested for a number of years. Gib Lowenberg Skips Owing Large Sums

Was Proprietor of the Soldiers' Canteen at the Camp at the University

Something of a sensation was occasioned in the city this morning by news that Gib Lowenberg had skipped the country, owing wholesale merchants and many of Norman's citizens amounts aggregating many hundreds of dollars ...

Lowenburg came here a year or so ago as a life insurance agent, in which he had been very successful. He became prominent in war work, and gained the privilege of starting a soldiers' canteen at the University. On the representation that the net proceeds of the enterprise were to be divided with the soldiers, the canteen secured a good business, but it is said there never was any dividend for the soldiers. When it was seen that the war was over and the soldiers at the University were to be disbanded, Mr. Lowenberg realized that his occupation as canteen proprietor was gone, and retained ex-County Judge Geo. C. Burke to represent him in an attempt to square with his creditors. A meeting of his creditors was to be held today, but Mr. Lowenberg's absence put a quietus on that. ...
